

Yes, You Can!

Drawing for Those Who Think They Can't

A little courage. A beautiful place to begin.

"YOU inspired me! Your sharing of your knowledge, kind words, and 'just do it' attitude helps me. So many are stressed out. Art gives us a place to just calm down and get into a zone, where nothing matters except putting marks on the paper."

– Shirley B., former student

As West Virginia's landscape begins to wake from winter, join us at The Gathering at Long Point, on the shores of beautiful Summersville Lake. Imagine leaving the rush behind, breathing in the quietly emerging wooded surroundings, hearing the twitter of spring birds and the rustle of tiny creatures in the leaf litter. Take a nature walk, then give yourself permission to create.

It's the ideal inspiration for your creativity, whether you're reviving a long-dormant drawing practice or you're a first-time, budding artist. Beginner to intermediate skill levels are welcome in this immersive, hands-on class, where you'll learn from each other as much as from the instructor.

Stormy's instruction methodology is a unique blend of proven classic studio techniques for understanding how objects take up space, materials use and application, combined with some of her own discoveries from a lifetime of practice and teaching. She'll reveal secrets to accurate observation, how to practice hand-eye coordination, and understand basic elements of rendering texture, lighting and perspective.

The class size is intentionally limited to make sure you receive as much one-on-one instruction as you need. And don't worry: No matter your skill level, even if you've never picked up a pencil, in a decade of teaching this class, Instructor Stormy Shafer has never had anyone leave still believing they couldn't draw.

Beyond the drawing table, enjoy the possibility of nature walks, conversations with new friends, private drawing practice, and community campfires. Come for the drawing. Stay for the connection.
